Ok, so it sounds like you were racing a guy and one of your tires blew out. You slid into the curb, hit two fences (!?), two bushes, four bricks, and a trash can (!?).

Your cam/valves are ticking/knocking now?? Your oil pan was bent and you think your cam may not be getting enough oil?

Man, it sounds like your car would be wrecked after an incident like that... The valves slapping would be the least of my concern unless it's different from what I read.....

i was being a dummy racing, blew a tire out and slid into a curb, hit 2 fences, 2 bushes, 4 bricks and a trash can (not the one i was racing), all at the highly believable speeds of 30-45 MPH!!!

now i have a loud cam knock, and i'm not sure if my oil pan sustained damage, maybe it was pushed back and now oil is not being pumped up to the cams, any ideas?

and oh you, even though i'm a total retard and cranked a curb amongst other things, i still

Well I think it's official now. dont_go_under has rolled up on the scene and embarrassed himself repeatedly, and will be reputed for falling into the cliché of "new user who creates a thread that starts with the usual incoherent babble". Nonetheless, I believe it is a positive contribution to the reading material here, so thanks for that and keep it coming.Member Since

The reason I homeschool my children is because the spelling and grammar presented here is a prime example of the failure of the public education system to produce people capable of communicating in logical and understandable ways.

All that aside, you should look into the oil pump damage as being the primary cause of your i've seen more disfunctional homeschooled children than i have from products of the public system. i'm talking socially, not academically. 😄 beyond that, you probably screwed up your car. you should talk to the land owners and compensate them for the damage you did to their fence and 4 bricks, and then look under your car to see what looks bent, broken, and dinged. 🚗 not to ruin the off topic nature of the thread, but yeah you might want to try a new oil pan and hope you didnt' wreck the seals from under oiling otherwise your in for noise, leaks, and probably a rebuild down the line.
